"And what better chance could you ask?" I cried. "Man, I've often thought that an innkeeper would make the best story teller in the world."

'Not now," he said eagerly. "May be in the old days when you had pilgrims and ballad makers and highwaymen and mail coaches on the road, but not now. Nothing comes here but motorcars full of fat women, who stop for lunch, and a fisherman or two in the spring and the shooting tenants in August. There is not much material to be got out of that. I want to see life, to travel the world and write things like Kipling and Conrad. But the most I've done yet is to get some verses printed in Chambers' Journal." I looked at the inn, standing golden

"That's what Kipling says," he said. Ms eyes lightening, and he quoted verse about "romance bringing up the nine-fifteen."

"Here's a true tale for you then." I cried, "and a month hence you can make a novel out of it."

Sitting on the bridge in the soft May gloaming I pitched him a lovely yarn. It was true in essentials, too. the sitered the minor details. I made out that I was a mining magnate from Kimberley who had had a lot of trouble with I. D. B. and had shown up

[* This refers to the illicit diamond buyers of South Africa. As explained by Dr. George Frederick Kunz in as address before the National Geographic society (1933): "The diamond mining companies of South Africa have unusual power under the laws of the colony se that no one is permitted to buy or sell diamonds unless authorized sough diamond buyers. Any one in whose possession uncut, stones are found is brought to immediate punishment, and the penalty is unusually severe for innocent or brought to immediate punishment, and the penalty is unusually severe for innocent or guilty buyers or guilty dealers. The detective system is remarkable. People in all walks of life belong to this special force. Had it not been for the importance of the diamond mines under Cecil Rhodes and his stringent laws, it would have been impossible to mine diamonds with profit."]

They had pursued me across the ocean and had killed my best friend and were now on my track. I told the story well, though I say parching days, the wonderful blue velvet nights. I described an attack on my life on the voyage home, and I made a really horrid affair of the Portland place murder.

"You're looking for adventure!" I led. "Well, you've found it here. The devils are after me, and the police are after them. It's a race that I

"Heavens!" he whispered, drawing his breath in sharply. "It is all pune Rider Haggard and Conan Doyle!"

"You believe me," I said gratefully. "Of course I do." And he held out his hand. "I believe everything out of the common. The only thing to dis-

He was very young, but he was the man for my money.

"I think they're off my track for the moment, but I must lie close for a couple of days. Can you take me in?" He caught my elbow in his eagerness and drew me toward the bouse -You can lie as snug here as if you were in a mouse hole. I'll see that no-body blabs either. And you'll give me some more mare al about your adven-

As I entered the inn porch I heard from far off the beat of an engine. There silhouetted against the dusky west was my friend, the monoplane.

He gave me a room at the back of the house with a fine outlook over the plateau, and he made me free of his own room, which was stacked with cheap editions of his favorite authors. I never saw the grandmother, so I guessed she was bedridden. An old woman called Margit brought me my meals, and the innkeeper was around me at all hours. I wanted some time to myself, so I invented a job for him. He had a mo-torcycle, and I sent him off next morning for the daily paper, which usually arrived with the post in the late after-noon. I told him to keep his eyes skinned and make note of any strange figure he saw, keeping a special, sharp lookout for motors and aeroplanes. Then I sat down in real earnest to Scudder's notebook.

He came back at midday with the Scotsman. There was nothing in it except some further evidence of Paddock and the milkman and a repetition of yesterday's statement that the murderer had gone north. But there was a long article, reprinted from the Times. about Karolides and the state of affairs in the Balkans, though there was no mention of any visit to England. I got rid of the innkeeper for the afternoon, for I was getting very warm in my search for the cipher.

As I told you, it was a numerical cipher, and by an elaborate system of experiments I had pretty well discovered what were the nulls and stops. The trouble was the keyword, and when I thought of the odd million words he might have used I felt pretty hopeless. But about 3 o"clock I had a sudden inspiration. The name Julia Czechenyi fiashed across my memory. Scudder had said it was the key to the Karolides business, and it occurred to me to try if on his cipher. It worked. The five letters of "Julia" gave me the position of the vowels. A was J, the tenth letter of the alpha bet, and so represented by X in the cipher. "Czechenyi" gave me the numerals for the principal consonants.

In half an hour I was reading with a whitish face and fingers that drummed on the table. I glanced out of the window and saw a big touring car coming up the glen toward the inn. It drew up at the door and there was the sound of people alighting. There seemed to be two of them, men in acquascutums and tweed caps.

Ten minutes later the innkeeper slipped into the room, his eyes bright with excitement.

"There's two chaps below looking for you," he whispered. "They're in the dining room having whiskies and so das. They asked about you and said they had hoped to meet you here. Oh! And they described you jolly well, down to your boots and shirt. I told them you had been here last night and had gone off on a motorcycle this morning, and one of the chaps swore like a navvy." I made him tell me what they looked like.

One was a dark eyed, thin fellow with bushy eyebrows, the other was always smiling and lisped in his talk. Neither was any kind of foreigner. I took a bit of paper and wrote these words in German as if they were part | ing to play a lone hand. of a letter:

Black Stone. Scudder had got on to this, but he could not act for a fortnight. I doubt if I can do any good now, especially as Karolides is uncertain about his plans. But if Mr. T. advises I will do the best I— I manufactured it rather neatly, so that it looked like a loose page of a private letter.

"Take this down and say it was found in my bedroom, and ask them to return it to me if they overtake me." Three minutes later I heard the car begin to move and, peeping from behind the curtain, caught sight of the two figures. One was slim, the other was sleek. That was the most I could make of my reconnaissance. The innkeeper appeared in great excitement. "Your paper woke them up." he said gleefully. "The dark fellow went as white as death and cursed like blazes, and the fat one whistled and looked ngly. They paid for their drinks with half a sovereign and would not wait for change."

"Now I'll tell you what I want you to do," I said. "Get on your bicycle and run off to Newton Stewart to the chief constable. Describe the two men, and say you suspect them of having had something to do with the London murder. You can invent reasons. The two will come back, never Not tonight, for they'll follow me forty miles along the road, but first thing tomorrow morning. Tell the police to be here bright and early."

CHAPTER V.

The Radical Candidate's Adventure. TE set off like a docile child, while I worked at Scudder's notes. When he came back we dined, and in common decency I had to let him pump me. I gave him a lot of stuff about lion hunts and the Matabele war, thinking all the while what tame businesses these were compared to this I was now engaged When he went to bed I sat up and finished Scudder. I smoked in a chair till daylight, for sergeant. They put their car in a coach house under the innkeeper's in structions and entered the house Twenty minutes later I saw from my window a second car come across the plateau from the opposite direction.

It did not come up to the inn, but stopped 200 yards off in the sheker of a patch of wood. I noticed that its occupants carefully reversed it before leaving it. A minute or two later I heard their steps on the gravel outside the window.

My plan had been to lie hid in my bedroom and see what happened. I had a notion that if I could bring the police and my other more dangerous pursuers together something might work out of it to my advantage. But now I had a better idea.

I scribbled a line of thanks to my host, opened the window and dropped quietly into a gooseberry bush. Unobserved I crossed the dike, crawled down the side of a tributary burn and won the highroad on the far side of the patch of trees. There stood the car, very spick and span in the morning sunlight, but with the dust on her which told of a long journey. I started her, jumped into the chauffeur's seat and stole gently out on to the plateau. Almost at once the road dipped so that I lost sight of the inn, but the wind seemed to bring me the sound of angry voices. You may picture me driving that forty horsepower car for all she was worth over the crisp moor roads on that shining May morning, glancing back at first over my shoulder and looking anxiously to the next turning; then driving with a vague eye, just wide enough awake to keep on the highway. For I was thinking desperately of what I had found in Scudder's note-The little man had told me a pack of lies. All his yarns about the Balkens and the foreign office conference were eye wash and so was Karolides And yet not quite, as you shall hear. I had staked everything on my be lief in his story and had been let down Here was his book telling me a different tale, and instead of being once bit, twice shy, I believed it absolutely. Why? I don't know. It rang desperately true, and the first yarn, if you understand me, had been in a queer way true also in spirit. The 15th day of June was going to be a day of destiny, a bigger destiny than the k. ling of a man. It was so big that I didn't blame Scudder for keeping me out of the game and want-That, I was pretty clear, was his in-

He had told me something which sounded big enough, but the real thing was so immortally big that he, the man who had found it out, wanted it all for himself. I didn't blame him. It was risks, after all, that he was chiefly greedy about.

The whole story was in the notes, with gaps, you understand, which he would have filled up from his memory. He stuck down his authorities, too, and had an odd trick of giving them all a numerical value and then striking a balance, which stood for the reliability of each stage in the yarn. The three names he had printed were authorities, and there was a man, Ducrosne, who got five out of a possible five, and another fellow, Ammersfeet, who got three. The bare bones of the fale were all that was in the book-these and one queer phrase which occurred half a dozen times inside brackets. "Thirtynine steps" was the phrase, and at its last time of use it ran. "Thirty-nine steps I counted them; high tide 10:17 p. m."

I could make nothing of that, The first thing I learned was that it was no question of preventing a war.

That was coming as sure as Christmas; had been arranged, said Scudder, ever since Bebruary, 1912. Karolides was going to be the occasion.

He was booked all right and was going to hand in his checks on June 15, two weeks and four days from that May morning. I gathered from Scudder's notes that nothing on earth could prevent that. His talk of Epirote guards that would skin their own grandmothers was all nonsense.
